March 19 Farmers Market Canceled Due to Inclement Weather Forecast, Special Market Added March 26

Charleston, S.C.—Due to the risk of severe weather including high winds and thunderstorms forecast for Saturday, March 19, 2022, the Charleston Farmers Market in Marion Square has been canceled.

Since this is the second week in a row that the market has been canceled due to weather, a limited farmers market, featuring just farmers and growers, will take place Saturday, March 26 from 8 a.m. to noon in Marion Square. The full Charleston Farmers Market is expected to resume April 9, weather permitting.

City of Charleston Emergency Management Director Shannon Scaff said, “The safety of our market vendors and patrons is our first priority. That’s why, after consulting with the National Weather Service Charleston, we’ve decided to cancel this weekend’s farmers market.”
